Is growth in unconventional oil drilling outpacing gains in overall oil-directed drilling? The count of rigs targeting oil as a percentage of total U.S. land rigs has increased this year from 50% to 56% in the 3Q average to date, reports The Land Rig Newsletter team. Meanwhile, the percentage of oil-directed rigs working in unconventional plays as a share of total U.S. oil rigs was 62% in The Unconventional Drilling Report. That compares with 26% reported in the first UDR of 2011. The increase isn't really that dramatic; it's just an artifact of the UDR's expanded coverage of unconventional plays. That expansion added 400 rigs to the unconventional oil rig count, hiking oil's share of unconventionals from 26% in the previous UDR. So, in fact, growth in the unconventionals' share of total oil rigs lags the rate of gains in conventional oil drilling. That says more about the improvement in the investment climate for small operators drilling shallow oil wells than it does about the health of unconventional oil drilling, which still looks mighty robust.
