Subject: U.S. EPA Clean Power Plan Announcement

Dear Colleagues:

EPA is continuing to move forward to take flexible, common-sense steps to cut carbon pollution from the power sector—the largest source of carbon pollution in the United States. Since last year, the agency has been following through on President Obama's directive to extensively engage with the broadest possible range of perspectives as we work to develop a plan to cut energy waste, strengthen the economy and leverage cleaner energy sources.

Today, EPA announced that it will finalize the proposed Clean Power Plan and the proposed Carbon Pollution Standards for new, modified and reconstructed sources by mid-summer 2015. In addition, in response to requests from some states and stakeholders, the agency will be starting the regulatory process to develop a rule that would set forth a proposed federal plan and could help states starting to think about developing their own plans. As is always the case, EPA's strong preference is for states to submit their own plans that are tailored to their specific needs and priorities. The agency expects to issue the proposed federal plan this coming summer as well.

Additional information and a timeline for these steps can be found in a fact sheet on our website at: www.epa.gov/cleanpowerplan

Please give me a call if you have questions or need any additional information.

Regards,

Brent Maier
