Subject: U.S. EPA Notification: White Paper on the Lead and Copper Rule

Dear Colleagues:

As EPA is working on revising the Lead and Copper Rule (LCR), the agency is releasing a paper that describes principles for LCR revisions, challenges with the current LCR, National Drinking Water Advisory Council recommendations and other stakeholder input on revising, and potential elements under consideration for the LCR revisions.

Options include lead service line replacement, improving optimal corrosion control treatment requirements, consideration of a health-based benchmark, the potential role of point-of-use filters, clarifications or strengthening of tap sampling requirements, increased transparency, and public education requirements.

EPA has received extensive recommendations from a variety of stakeholders, and we expect that this paper will help to inform that engagement as we work to develop a proposed rule. EPA will continue to use the best available science and to conducting robust analyses of regulatory options. EPA is committed to revising the LCR and is working intensely to develop proposed revisions to be issued in 2017.

The white paper and more information is available at:
https://www.epa.gov/dwstandardsregulations/lead-and-copper-rule-long-term-revisions

Please let me know if you have any question or need any additional information.

Regards,

Brent Maier
