Wayne,

I just got back from Williams. They were drilling LSZ43 and had to stop at 206' because they hit steam coming up through the drill casing. Both Yellow Jacket and AMEC field personnel were communicating with their offices to determine how to proceed. It looks like YJD is going to get some additional safety equipment, such as face shields, and try to construct some type of shield at the well head before they continue with this boring. They will try to get it drilled tomorrow and then construct the well. It may be late Wednesday or Thursday before they're on to the next well.

They had a pump rig out there to pull pumps, but the first well they disassembled turned out to be a steam well, so they went to new well LSZ51 to install packers instead.

I have to drive to Yuma tomorrow afternoon and will be back late Wednesday. Kyle will let me know what's going on Thursday. They are off Friday - Monday and will resume with two rigs on Tuesday.
