Suzanne,

What's confusing to me is the apparent inconsistency that EPA is going to withdraw its proposed determination (that the mine can not be done and be in compliance with the CWA) while at the same time still use the watershed assessment in Bristol Bay that led to its proposed determination. If EPA will rely on the same science how can Pebble Limited Partnership get final approval from EPA?

Also, what prompted EPA to agree with this settlement? This has been a hot-button issue especially for national environmental groups for many years. They thought it was entirely appropriate for EPA to reject the mine in a pre-emptive assessment.

Thanks,

Dan

Hi Dan,

Sorry I missed your email earlier. I'm deployed this week on an emergency response down in Portland. I've passed your request on to my team, asking someone to call you back asap. If you don't hear from EPA today, let me know and I'll follow up. Thanks for your patience.

Thanks,

Suzanne
