To: Juan_Somoano@oxy.com[Juan_Somoano@oxy.com]
From: Yeh, Alice
Sent: Thur 3/2/2017 3:20:30 PM
Subject: RE: Today's call

Ah yes! I am sitting at home marveling at the force of the wind whistling by - didn't know you were attempting to fly in it.

That's fine, I'll wait for your e-mail.

Tomorrow I'll be flying to Alaska, so will be on planes all day. If we can't talk today, let's talk next Monday/Tues.

-----Original Message-----
From: Juan_Somoano@oxy.com [mailto:Juan_Somoano@oxy.com]
Sent: Thursday, March 02, 2017 9:56 AM
To: Yeh, Alice <Yeh.Alice@epa.gov>
Subject: Today's call

Hi Alice,

I just wanted to provide you notice that I may be late today for our call. I was scheduled to return from NJ earlier this a.m. for arrival in Texas by noon, however we are still on the runway in Newark due to high winds, and it sounds like we could still be stacked up in line to depart.

For your convenience why don't you hold off on dialing in to our call-in number until I can confirm my availability via email on the ground? I will let you know if the time still works or provide a proposed later time on landing, however if you have not heard from me you can assume I am still in air. We can reschedule any time tomorrow if you prefer, although I understand you may be pretty busy prior to next week out.

Thanks.

Juan